The Proper way to Plant Fruit Trees

One Year Old Trees, straight whips, after they have been planted, should be cut back 20 to 36 inches above ground.

HINTS ON TRANSPLANTING

In setting out trees select a fertile, well-drained soil which can be plowed early and worked soon after heavy rains. After the ground has been plowed and replowed, dig holes from one to two feet wider than the roots of the tree when spread out in their natural position, leaving a small mound in the hole; trim off the end of the large roots smoothly from the underside, using a sharp knife; shorten the top branches to one-half their original length in order to restore the balance between the tops and the roots, which must suffer some from removal. Plant trees 5 to 6 in. deeper than they stand in the nursery, except dwarf pear trees, which should be set deep enough for pear stock to be ten inches below the surface. The dirt for filling in around the roots should be surface or top soil, without manure and made fine to pack closely; use the fingers to spread out all the fibers during the operation. The mellow earth should rise two or three inches above the surrounding surface, to allow all subsequent settling, the next operation is mulching, which is the application around the trees of straw, old hay, leaves; it keeps the land moist and light, and when decayed makes manure.

To protect trees from worms or borers, early each spring have the earth raised around the tree twelve or fifteen inches high, and remove same in fall. Trees should be mulched early every fall.
